

EMMA-HOPE

ABOUT : CONTACT : CV

Sunday, 28 September 2014

Deaf Men Dancing.

image sourced from BBC News, Ouch <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/blogs-ouch-29324932>

Back in May this year at Bournemouth I witnessed some of Deaf Men Dancing's creative process as part of the Integrated Dance Summit with Pavilion Dance South West. I remember being disoriented by the sounds surrounding the dance space, noises that people with tinitus commonly hear. I felt like I was being drawn into a piece which was very personal on so many levels for the choreographer Mark Smith, in particular his childhood memories of his first hearing aid and experiencing that as a young child as well as the dancers in his company. His all-male ensemble of four professional dancers experience a variety of different levels in hearing loss which only amplifies the realism involved in creating their new work 'Hear! Hear!' which will be performed at Sadler's Wells this evening (Sunday 28 September) as part of the =dance series. I can see a place and need for work on this level to be toured throughout the UK like so many other disabled dance artists too.

The show presents to the hearing audience the hidden or little-known aspects of deafness in a way Smith hopes that are able to relate in one way or another. It hopes to also give an audience another insight into the ways a disabled person can contribute to the dance sector.

Mark Smith has a really interesting development in the dance sector. Mark who was diagnosed deaf at the age of four his first encounter with rhythm and dance was at his sister's ballet class. As he couldn't hear the music he established a rhythm from what he could feel instead. He copied the movements and was encouraged by the teacher to join the ballet class. He went on to study dance at degree level and has contributed to the dance sector as a choreographer for the past 20 years. He now takes those past experiences to use through teaching other deaf people how to dance. Smith would encourage his students to place their hand on a speak to experience the pulses coming from the audio source if a piano is not present in the studio. "The vibrations move through their arms and into their bodies," he says. And when the students move away from direct contact with the sound, they maintain contact with the rhythm via the vibrations in the wooden floor. "That's why we always dance barefoot," he adds. (Italic sourced from <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/blogs-ouch-29324932>)

I would urge you to read more about Mark Smith over on his website, <http://marksmithproduction.com/deafmendancing.html>

Talk Soon, Em x

Posted by Emma Hope Newitt at 05:51

M B t f p g+1 Recommend this on Google

Labels: 2014, Dance Research

Emma-Hope | 23 | Leicester

Created back in January 2014, this blog contains Dance and Lifestyle through various mediums. Enjoys a good book, a cup of tea milk with two sugars and dancing through life. Currently works as Dance4's Young Associate Programmer for Children and Young People as well as being a Freelance Dance Artist across the East Midlands.

22 followers

VIA BLOGLOVIN'

Follow by Email

Follow me!

No comments:

Post a Comment

Enter your comment...

Comment as: Google Account

Publish Preview

Newer Post • Home • Older Post

Subscribe to: Post Comments (Atom)

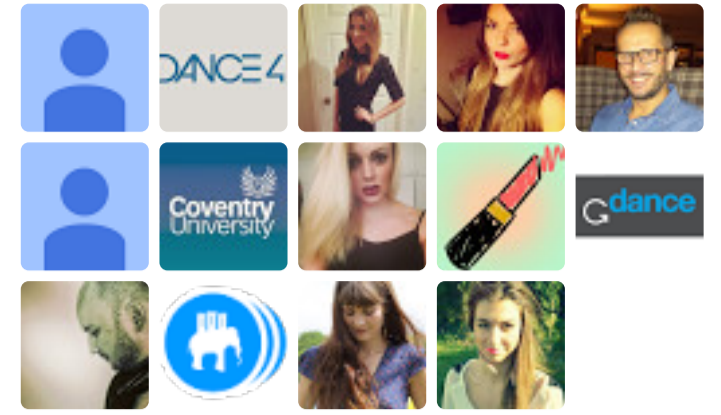

Total Pageviews

32703270

Google+ Followers

Emma Hope Newitt

+ Add to circles

16 have me in circles

View all

POPULAR POSTS

Celebrating 30 years with Magpie Dance..
Picture from Twitter user @MagpieDance Seeking the opportunity to engage young people with disabilities into the arts can be an ...

What I'm Loving! | January 2015
Hey all! Hope you're all having a wonderful 2015 so far, can't believe February is just around the corner! I decided this year t...

Hello 2015!
.... so 2015 is here! have you noticed my revamp for 2015? it's something that from the mind of a complete perfectionist is happy w...

Top Moments of 2014..
As 2014 draws to a close it's nice to look back on the great moments of the year passing by to remember it for. The start of 2014 was ...

LABELS

- 2013
- 2014
- 2015
- Candoco Dance Company
- dance
- Dance Research
- favourite things
- Foundation for Community Dance
- inclusive
- liebster award
- Personal
- Projects
- Student

LINKS

DISCLAIMER

ALL posts written on this blog belong to Emma-Hope Newitt. This means opinions spoken about aren't those of the other people involved within the organisations.
